The expression may have known colloquially prior to 1611. The Oxford Dictionary of Quotations lists "Every man for himself and the Devil take the hindmost" as an 'early 16th century' proverb, although they provide no evidence to support that assertion. A more modern usage of the same idea is that "when a group of people are being chased by a bear, you don't need to be faster than the bear, you need to be faster than the slowest person in the group".
